The books were old. Also the town around was not all the way done. It was dusty and all the books were black and white. The computers are not there. The lighting was not good. The heat was not good. Now it's fun colorful and awesome.

I imagine that 100 years ago, there was a lot of dust on the books. There might have been an odd yellow color. They didn't have posters. There might have not been air conditioning.

I think 100 years ago the Public library didn't have any barcode scanners to check out books. And instead of hard covers they had leather covers. I don't think they had air conditioners to cool down the building. I don't think they had printers to print the books. I also think they didn't have very many lights to light up the building.

100 years ago they had no AC. And no colors
on books. No computers.
No carpet. No cars.

I think: long ago the library was very hot, ~~and~~
It probably had green, brown, and white books. ~~It~~
The lighting was bad. They had wood floors.
That's what I think the library was like.

100 years ago they had little house on the prairie. They didn't have any ac. They didn't have that much books. They had no computers.

Ellie M 4th grade

Once upon a time there was a lady that worked at a library. It wasn't the best place to visit at all really. It had cobwebs, spiders, and was dark, creepy and dirty. It was small and very different. The books were different and were not like they are today. At that time they had to write the book with a feather and ink. There was nothing except books, no sinks or anything. People would visit quite a bit and more people wanted to work there. Because of this the library got more customers and they got more money and used the money to fix up the building. They kept on growing and making the library better. Now it has become the library it has today and they will just make it better and better.

Once there was a woman that walked in the library and wanted a so she went to the library so she went in and said it so hot in here. So she wanted to get a book
so she got snow white and sleeping beauty.
So she got the book and then went to the bathroom. In there she saw that the door was really creaking. So then she left
and she was hot again

It was like in the library it had no AC in the building. The books were real dusty and old. It was a little small library. There were no lights in the library. There were no water in the building.

The Public Library

I think it would be very dusty. I also think the books were black^{and} white. The paint was probably chipping off the small, cold walls. The floor was probably wood. It would probably be a very small room. There was no conditioning to keep you cool. The shelves were probably small. There would probably be no magazines. The books would be greasy. Probably no heater. No lights just candles. The front of the books would probably no desk no scanner. No rugs, No cushions. No computers, No pencils or paper. There would not be many books. There would probably be no book chart. Also No cupboards. No clocks, No fire alarm. Also No sinks. They wouldn't have first aid kit. The wood floors wood would probably creak. No stuff animals. The door would probably be a pooshy door no handle just wood on the doors No paint. There would be very dim inside. There would be cobwebs. The words would be whritten with ink in the books. There would not be any decorations in the public library a 100 years ago.

Mary S. 4th grade

I think the books would be black and white. Maybe the only thing to light the building was a couple of candles. There was probably no carpet, and in the summer they probably didn't have air conditioning so it was probably very hot. Also there wasn't as many books. It would probably be in a smaller room. The walls weren't painted.

One hundred years ago
when you walked inside of the library. Many bookshelves empty paper book covers.
You get your library card
out and start looking for a book. You feel like the walls are closing in
every time you walk in.
You find a very dusty book. You walk on the carpetless floor no color
no posters. You go to the checkout desk show your library card, and then
you sit down and start
reading. But even though everything is colorless it all the color comes back and the magic begins. After half an hour
it's time for you to leave.
You put in a bookmark and grab your library card. You grab your book and start
walking outside and you think
"I hope the library will never change."

Moorea m 4th Grade

The books had only black and white pics.
There books had cobwebs on them. The people wrote with ink. The walls had cracks in them.
The floor was concrete. Ther room was very

I think the library was not as big 100 years ago.

It would also not have any computers there. There would not be as many books there. I also think that there would not be any videos that you could checkout. There would not be as many people there. They would not have as many rooms. It would have had older books there. That is what I think the library was like 100 years ago.

I think that 100 years ago there would not be as many shelves for books. There would also be electronic things to check out the books. They probably didn't have good lights and they didn't have air conditioning. They didn't have the computers. The walls were probably not painted. They probably didn't have library cards. They didn't have a sink or cabinet's. It probably didn't have good carpet or didn't have any carpet and had wood floors.

I would imagen that it had lanterns for lights. With it haveing the books be writen in ink. Alos the bookshelves wouldn't have as many book as today. It would probly be smaller.

The Public Library

I think the library would be really dusty. I also don't think there wouldn't be as many shelves. The paint would probably be chipping off of the small cold walls. The floor would probably be wood. All they had for heat would be a fire. The library would be really dim inside and all they had for lights would be candles. They wouldn't have outlets or electricity. The books would be dusty and the covers would be like a plain color and have a black and white pictures. The words would be written with a feather and black ink. The library would be very small. The library would have no carpets, cushions, or rugs. There would be no computers either. There would not be any desks or a scanner like they have now. They would not have conditioning. There would also not be that many books. So since there would not be as many books the shelves would be smaller. There would not be signs on the walls. The library would either be cold or warm probably not the exact temperature you like. There would also be no furnace. There would be no water fountain. There would not be any plants. There would be no kleenexes or sanitizer. No curtains or magazines. The books would feel kind of greasy. There would be cobwebs hanging from the little walls. There probably wouldn't be cuboids or pencils. There also might not be any paper. There would be no cart to put the books in. There would be no stuffed animals. The trash cans would be different. There would be no fire alarm and they would also not have heaters. They wouldn't have a first aid kit. The door would creak every time someone opened it. There would be no clocks or anything to tell time with. There would be no decorations in the Public Library 100 years ago.

I think what the library was like 100 hundred years ago was smaller and had no air conditioner in it and you did not have to check out the book when you went out. The books most had a black and white cover and the pictures in the book were black and white to. It probably had less books than it had to day. It probably had older pictures.

I would imagine a library 100 years ago would look like a small house with 5-15 bookshelves and 30 books on each bookshelf. I think the books would have no pictures and there would be no scanner. I think people wouldn't go there as often. People didn't read as much that long ago.

One day at the Wahoo Public Library Elena went to go check out a book as she walked in she saw her best friend Aspen she was so happy. But as she walked forward she heard a creak in the floor. She was kinda worried but it was happen all the time so she was used to it. She found her book. She went to check it out. She showed them her card and they stamped her book. After she was done checking out her book she went to go talk to Aspen they were talking about book club after Elena and Aspen signed up for book club.

The End

Library 100 yrs ago

I think the library 100 years ago had white and black coloring on the front of the book covers. I also don't think that there was any computers in the library back then. I think there would be no paper to put your name on and write your book down to wait for. I think there would be a feather pen with black ink to write with. They might have let dogs and cats come in the library with their owners. Also maybe it never closed they could have people work in the morning and other people in the afternoon. They could've have had snacks if you were hungry and you didn't want to walk a block to go to a restaurant. Also there were probably no couches or furniture to sit on. They might've been able to talk a little louder than normal in the library. Maybe they didn't have the books in alphabetical order or not in the authors last name. People probably could not of taken their book home so they would have to read it at the library. This is what I thought the library was like 100 years ago.

Avery S. 4th k

I think there were many books by famous authors at the library. I think there were no computers and no scanners so they had to write on paper when to bring back their book. I think they used featherspens and had to dip the feather in ink. I also think they let there animals and pets into the library. I think there was no light and they would close pretty early. I think they didn't have any couches or places to read. I also think they served food at the library and fresh lemonade. They couldn't talk very loudly in a library. I also think they couldn't have a place to put the book when they returned it and had to put it away by themselves. They properly didn't have it in alphabetical order so it was hard to find books. I also think they had little books because there were a couple authors.

One day in 1923 Abraham Lincoln walked in the library and he saw George Washington.

George was checking out
"How to be a good president."

Meanwhile Lincoln heard
ghosts and hid by George Washington. George wondered why Lincoln hid under him.
Lincoln said "there are ghosts"
and the both ran out the library
screaming. The ghosts turned out to be Thomas Jefferson!

THE END

I think the library was very small building. With very little books on the shelves. Probably no room for like 20-30 people. I think there was no heating air condition. I bet most of the books had no pictures in them. Sometimes I think they were all written in a feather you could dip in ink and then it would write what you wanted then if you mess up you would just have to scribble over it if you messed up. I think there was no sitting area so you would have to sit on an old quilt with holes in it. There also wasn't a such thing as a scanner or library cards to check books out. And one thing I forgot was it probably had a lot of stairs to climb up to get to the door. And to get higher books off the shelves they would probably use a moving ladder like Beauty and the Beast. This is what I thought it may look like back then.

Happy 100th
